BASICS

Primary sources are "the law" itself, which we are bound to follow. Secondary sources are materials about the law; they explain and help us to find "the law" in a given situation. Although secondary sources, sometimes called "persuasive authority," are very useful in legal research, and courts often consider them, no one is legally bound by them.

An example of primary law is Deering's California Codes Annotated. This multi-volume set contains California's statutes, codified (organized by subject) into 29 titles. An example of a secondary source is A Summary of California Law by B.E. Witkin, a critical examination of California law. While Witkin's analysis is highly regarded and often cited by California courts, it is not "the law."

The Law Library has the majority of California primary law in print or online in Westlaw and Lexis Advance, which may only be used in the Law Library.

Westlaw content is organized by type of resource and jurisdiction. Start from the Home Page, select the [State Materials] tab and select [California], then select the type of material you need, for example, [California Proposed & Enacted Legislation]. If you have a specific citation, just type it into the search box at the top of the page.

Lexis Advance is organized by content type and jurisdiction. Start from the Home Page at the "Explore Content" section, and select the [State] tab and select [California]. All of the current California primary law materials are listed. To start your search, click on the source material you want to search, for example, [All California Statutes and Legislation] and then enter keyword(s) or a citation in the red search box and click on the red magnifying glass.

Many of these sources are also freely accessible from anywhere via the Internet.

STATUTES

California Statutes

California statutes begin as chaptered bills. A bill is "chaptered" by the Secretary of State after it has passed through both houses of the Legislature and has been signed by the Governor, or becomes law without the Governor's signature. These chaptered bills are then bound in the California government's official publication, Statutes and Amendments to the Codes of California.

These chaptered bills, also known as session laws, are published in the order they are passed. The Law Library's collection covers 1850-2008 at KFC 30 .A2 (Compact).

>>Home >>Law 101

Westlaw: Select the tab [State Materials], then [California]. Select [California Proposed & Enacted Legislation], then [Enacted Legislation (Session Laws)]. You may browse the most recent session laws or search all session laws passed during the current or two prior legislative sessions, in the search box provided.

California Codes

After the session laws are passed, they are organized into subject areas (“codified”) so they can be found. California statutory law consists of 29 titles, called “codes,” covering the following subject areas: Business and Professions Code, Civil Code, Code of Civil Procedure, Commercial Code, Corporations Code, Education Code, Elections Code, Evidence Code, Family Code, Financial Code, Fish and Game Code, Food and Agricultural Code, Government Code, Harbors and Navigation Code, Health and Safety Code, Insurance Code, Labor Code, Military and Veterans Code, Penal Code, Probate Code, Public Contract Code, Public Resources Code, Public Utilities Code, Revenue and Taxation Code, Streets and Highways Code, Unemployment Insurance Code, Vehicle Code, Water Code, and Welfare and Institutions Code. These titles are further subdivided into sections, each section being a law, for example, “Civil Code § 1.”

ADMINISTRATIVE DECISIONS

Administrative agencies may be established directly by the Constitution, as the Public Utilities Commission, for example, or be created by the Legislature. Agencies may sometimes be called Commissions or Boards. Many California executive and administrative agencies, in addition to promulgating regulations, serve a quasi-judicial function, investigating disputed claims, holding hearings ascertaining facts, making conclusions from the facts as a basis for their official action, and exercising discretion of a judicial nature to reach a binding decision. Most recent agency rulings may be found on the agency's website.
